Diamond Grill - Wikipedia

Fred Wah ' s Diamond Grill is a small gem of a book. Wah refers to the book as a “ biotext ” ; the publisher calls it both “ biofiction ” and “ biography. ” Wah denies that it contains “ true stories but, rather, poses or postures, ” and this echoes a line from the book ' s epigraph: “ When you ' re not ‘ pure ’ you just make it up. ”

Series of short sketches, about Wah's father's modern Chinese-Canadian restaurant in Nelson, BC, explore finding identity being mixed raced in a small Canadian town.

In a series of short sketches, Wah writes of his father's restaurant in Nelson, B.C. in a book that is neither fiction nor non-fiction. Poet Wah loves wordplay and puns, making his book a delight to read. Since it is also about Wah trying to understand his own mixed ancestry and trying to come to terms with the shameful treatment of Chinese in early Canadian history, it also contains evident anger. But it is love that ultimately shines through.

According to Fred Wah, the act of thinking critically is one of exploration and discovery. In this book, Wah demonstrates how writing poetry is writing critically. This scrapbook of Wah's work -- collected from fifteen years of his writing -- contains essays, reviews, journals, notes and, most importantly, poetic improvisations on contemporary poetry and identity.

the beginning, the most important stages of the authors life shall help to embed the story in its historical and socio-cultural context. After a detailed discussion on the symbolic meaning of food, with various examples providing insight into the many functions that food takes in daily life and human existence, as well as its crucial role in the context of communities, the paper will shift its focus to the text itself. The term biotext" and its emergence will be discussed and information on identity, ethnicity, other important themes and issues in the text and the language employed by Wah will be given. The last part of this paper constitutes its centrepiece, in which food as a metaphor and its cultural significance as a multilayered strategy and trope in postcolonial life writing will be discussed. The culinary language employed in Wahs innovative discourse of Diamond Grill makes the concept of food a metonymy of the elaboration of identity and culture. The use of food as a metaphor in the authors culinary memoirs will be discussed, and the way in which the metaphor of food provides an axis for the understanding of Wahs explorations of his socio-cultural background will be explained in more detail.

In Eating Chinese, Lily Cho examines Chinese restaurants as spaces that define, for those both inside and outside the community, what it means to be Chinese and what it means to be Chinese-Canadian.
